SHARING MEMORIES

For me, January is a time of review and reflection. The deadlines and duties of holiday preparation are behind us and we can have some "me time". On these beautiful days I can be grateful for the sunshine, the dry streets, the family and friend connections over the holidays. My holidays have become more streamlined, by choice. Shopping, wrapping, mailing, baking, cooking--been there, done that, a lot of that. After holidays pass, I can now peacefully read a book or visit a photo album. I haven't looked at a photo album in a long time. I think I will do that

But, there are choices. I could also be miserable. Look at those limbs and branches all over the lawn, look at the money spent for Christmas gifts, for groceries, anticipate and dread the coming frigid weather.

Both choices and attitudes are real. The fact we have choices is a luxury. Our memory box families have had a situation thrust upon them. It is something they would never choose. The future of their dreams has disappeared. Probably, at this moment, any future is impossible to visualize. But when they are presented with a beautiful memory box they must wonder who would do such a thing? The sadness is lifted for a moment. A smile breaks through. There will be more sad days but at some point, there will be comfort in holding the box and handling its contents. The memory box has worked its magic. Make more magic!

Recipe Appetizer Meatballs By Betty B

1 can (14oz) whole berry cranberry sauce
1 can (14 oz) sauerkraut rinse and well drained
1 bottle (120z) Chili sauce
3/4 C packed brown sugar
Mix all the above sauce ingredients together.

1 pkg (32 oz) frozen fully cooked homestyle meatballs, thawed

I wanted smaller meatballs so I used 1 lb hamburger, 1 lb Italian sausage, 1 egg, 4 or 5 saltine crackers crushed with enough milk to soak up crackers, 2 crushed garlic cloves, 1 small onion chopped, salt and pepper to taste. Or any other spices you might like to add.

Mix all and make small meatballs. Fry, drain grease. Put in a crockpot and add the sauce mixing through the meatballs. Simmer in Crock Pot till heated through. Minced chives or green onions chopped for on top before serving. OPTIONAL.
